Even though Photoshop offers many features, its photo retouching features are so powerful that those without the necessary talent often want to hire someone to do this kind of work. To find out more about photo retouching, see the next section. Photo Editing With a basic knowledge of Photoshop, users can edit and retouch photos quickly and easily — especially in the File • Edit Menu • Enhance, which includes the Adjustment Layers and Filter Layers. Figure 3-3 shows an example of manipulating a photo with Photoshop's nifty filter and layer features. The file shown here was originally a photograph taken with a Nikon D3x camera. Photoshop Elements gives you easy ways to play with the color, exposure, red-eye reduction, and various other image manipulation options. The most powerful feature is the Adjustment Layers so you can smooth, cut, and crop an image. The Adjustment Layers enable you to add or subtract portions of the image to create the desired effect. Photoshop is so incredibly effective with photo retouching that a magazine named one of its most powerful features: "The new black and white photo editing tools are like nothing before. The 'Adjustment Layers' afford unmatched control over contrast, tone, color, and even luminance." Photo editing is so powerful because the photo is viewed as a collection of layers: The upper layers are where you want to add elements (layers); the lower layers are where you need to remove elements (layers). The Photoshop Layers palette enables you to work with layers. The beauty of the Adjustment Layers is the ability to manipulate and change the editable image without changing the original image. To remove noise from the image, open the Enhance menu and choose Noise Reduction. To reduce or eliminate wrinkles, open the Enhance menu and choose Skin Toning. Figure 3-3: A photo that required some editing. The Filters and Layers dialog box At the top of the Filters and Layers dialog box, you find the Filter drop-down list, where you choose among the filters (see the list in Figure 3-4). To adjust the options, click the button with the plus sign or minus sign. Figure 3-4: Click Filters to select from the available filters. Click Layers at the top of the dialog box to see the available layers (refer to Figure 3-4). To add

Systematic evaluation and application of a Raman spectroscopic technique for the identification of cervical lesions. In the effort to improve detection of cervical lesions, this study systematically evaluated a newly developed Raman spectroscopic technique, optimized according to a stepwise approach. Two hundred and twenty-two cervical samples were collected from patients with cervical lesions (n = 112) or asymptomatic HPV-infected women (n = 110). The Raman spectra were acquired using a laser beam from a monochromatic instrument. Principal component analysis (PCA) was used for data preprocessing and for dimension reduction. The histological diagnosis was confirmed by histological analysis of the same biopsies that were analysed in this study. Sensitivity, specificity, positive predictive value and negative predictive value were calculated for various combinations of PCA components. The optimum combination of principal components (PCs) was determined using the jackknife-cross validation method (explained variance, R(2) value, k-means clustering). For HPV-infected women, the jackknife-cross validation method indicated R(2) (determined using cluster analysis) values of PC1 = 0.83 (for PC2 = 0.71) and PC2 = 0.89 (for PC1 = 0.85) as the optimal combinations to separate infected from noninfected women. For pre-invasive lesions, PC1 only was optimal to separate low grade squamous intraepithelial lesions (SIL) from the normal endocervical epithelium. In this study, a newly developed laser-Raman spectroscopic technique appears to be suitable for the identification of cervical lesions, especially for HPV-infected women.Mid-Arterial Restenosis: A Clinical Perspective. Acute myocardial infarction due to thrombolysis for ST-elevation myocardial infarction (STEMI) and mechanical reperfusion for acute coronary syndrome have reduced the mortality from myocardial infarction. More than two decades later, the same scenario can still be observed as a large number of patients who have received thrombolytic therapy or percutaneous coronary intervention (PCI) with stenting have experienced restenosis. Since then, restenosis has been recognized as a significant clinical issue. Subsequently, guidelines for the management of non-acute coronary events have addressed the issue of in-stent restenosis (ISR)
