Interface specification (ISOSAPL) For high-level editing such as annotation and shape modifications, CAD editors such as Inventor have a built-in editing and layout subsystem that uses a native interface specification for drawing information. Interface specification is defined by the user. Interface specifications are compatible with most CAD tools such as Inventor, SpaceClaim, and others. Inventor has its own native ISOSAPL editor which uses the ISOSAPL description directly. Inventor can be used in many CAD systems like SolidWorks, Autodesk Inventor, Autodesk Mechanical, RapidForm or Autodesk Alias. Troy Davis, a 31-year-old black man who was convicted of the 1989 murder of a white store owner, filed a motion last year in state court seeking DNA testing to confirm or rule out the presence of a third party at the crime scene. ADVERTISEMENT His attorneys argued that new technology made DNA testing more accurate and economical than previous testing methods. District judge William O. Nickerson Jr. denied the motion last month, saying the evidence was destroyed decades ago. But Davis' attorneys filed an appeal and asked Judge Nickerson to rule on the issue by the end of the year. According to Davis' attorneys, DNA testing could "conclusively" clear Davis of the murder charge, since three other suspects have already been identified. Officials at the Mississippi Department of Corrections (MDC) said that before the DNA testing could be done, the state would have to notify

It has the following structure: +----+-----+-----+ | id | domain_name | type | url | +----+-----+-----+ There are two columns, "domain_name" and "type" and "url" which is the URL of the webpage. Now, here is the problem. The database does not store "HTTP" in the "url" column when the type is "HTTP". But it does when the type is "HTTPS". What could be the problem and how can I solve this issue? A:
