===== ViSP is a space-port game, set in a calm, peaceful space environment. You travel the galaxy, mining minerals from small asteroids to fulfill the energy demands of a galactic civilization. On your way, you can deal with hostile lifeforms trying to halt your progress and take control of space ships. Use them to traverse the galaxy and find the source of the problem that needs to be solved. The beginning of ViSP seems very simple at first but the higher you advance in the game, the more complex it gets. As the cubes you have collected on your way, float around you, they can form new blocks that can then be assembled into more complex structures. This is how ViSP's core mechanic operates: You can drag blocks to and fro, similar to a construction worker shuffling boxes. The more boxes you drag together, the more blocks form that can connect to each other. The blocks allow you to create walls and in turn rooms. You can also drag and drop blocks into other blocks, to connect rooms in one to another. The red dots indicate your starting position (your space port), the blue dots are the points of energy the cubes are pulling from. Your primary task is to collect as many blocks as possible to power up your base. You're never bound to your base, you can freely travel the galaxy and discover new worlds! At first, the colors of the cubes - the blocks - only vaguely indicate their role as resources. But as you start building more complicated structures, you can more easily tell what the cubes you use are good for. Green cubes represent technology, blue cubes represent mineral resources and yellow cubes represent structures such as defense turrets, all that are needed to keep your base safe. The core feature of ViSP is the unrestricted building mechanic. By dragging blocks out of one another, you can freely create complex, intertwined structures filling the whole room! Your goal is to connect your space port to all the monuments floating around you in space, to gather their energy and find other cores scattered in the galaxy. In order to do that, you need to manage your resources, form patterns out of blocks to create special modules and build defensive structures to protect your station against enemies. ViSP is a fresh approach for a VR building game, with all game mechanics tailored towards a unique roomscale VR experience. The game is simple and intuitive at its core, but gets increasingly complex the further the player advances and

The remaining world leaders have united and formed the United Nations and have established an army called the Army. After their defeat of the last bastion of Liberty, the Army has chosen to make this their new home. The only opposition to the Army was the rebel government that had taken hold in the southern provinces. Rumai was their last bastion of freedom. Their journey has begun and it will be a hard one. The route is dangerous and fraught with encounters. What will they make of their struggles? This game takes place in the same universe as our previous games: Battle for America and Battle for World. Not a story of epic adventures! Just a journey of people in war. Rytmik is a early access arcade action game where you play a punk rock cyborg hero in a post-apocalyptic cyberpunk futuristic world. You use your powers to fight and foil the evil plans of the evil Corporate Machine regime. The action-RPG uses third-person over-the-shoulder perspective camera system that works on a variety of controls and a special touchpad motion controller. Unlike the last game, Rytmik Live, you can take turns, pause and explore. Rytmik Live is a much smaller game than Rytmik that includes the core mechanics from Rytmik, a simplified tutorial, a fresh combat system and a much more focused story. The story of Rytmik: Rytmik the cyborg hero was defeated when the Corporate Machine took over the planet. In a hidden underground facility, Rytmik survives and becomes a cyborg. Now he struggles to repair his body and find the key to defeat the Corporate Machine. The battle of arms began... Development Rytmik Live started when we started writing the story of Rytmik a year before. We are more focused on the gameplay and story right now and even though Rytmik Live is a smaller game, it will have a much better story and atmosphere compared to Rytmik. However we will still keep Rytmik's signature dance-fighting mechanic and the ability to take turns. Combat Rytmik Live is an action game where you control a cyborg hero in a third-person over-the-shoulder camera system that works on a variety of controls and a special touchpad motion controller. You have a bunch of abilities including melee attacks, gun shots, slow motion and supers that are used in a combination of combat skills. Reach Arc Mastery - Your controls are different depending on what skills you use. So, you can choose what you want to use. 3D Shots- It's a gun game, so there will be lots of gun shots. Full-motion Video- You can watch the full-motion videos of Rytmik. Switching Moves- You can switch moves easily while in combat. Simplified Tutorial- This will make it easy to start playing the game. Story- Rytmik has been a cyborg forever. Now he is a rebel cyborg who works to defeat the Corporate Machine. Fate of Rytmik- Rytmik wants to survive and fight for the people.

What's new:

By AMISHAdventure on June 4, 2009 Adventurer's League website does a great job of laying out the basic rules of wandering. Without delving into the rule-book, here's an account (based on my experience) of what wandering entails. Consider that those who wander tend to have a knowledge of the world beyond the walls of the cities they dwell, and they either take this with them or leave it on the local road. Where they head next depends on the purpose of their wanderings. A farmer will more likely continue to expand their fields, a hunter will more likely head into the wilderness to hunt. It also makes sense that those who are in the midst of a journey tend to end up where they started. Some might want to continue with the hunt, others as you say, travel onwards. I find this to be true: the great trade network of the world has in many ways denied "towns" of most of their reason to exist: people currently go straight where the easiest, shortest route from A to B is. One of the jobs of the world's great merchants is usually to move off the beaten tracks between major trade paths; in this way they help the villagers keep their farms, and keep their hunt away from the wolves. The shopkeepers of the city help maintain the safety of their houses, and by so doing bolster the self-supporting roles of the merchants and other wanderers on their journeys. Very few people wander purely for adventure's sake. Most people wander for some greater purpose; and I think the larger the assignment, the more likely is it to be kept longer than a week, and until you finish it, you are going to have to maintain your forward movement. Though I can't come up with any evidence to support the thesis. There's just something about walking that defies stereotyping. After reading a lot about the Celts I have concluded some things based on the description of them in those texts. - Their favorite curse word was "screw", This is what they usually used to escape into a fantasy world of brax. - The Celts were a warrior group, and this became mostly blood first and foremost. This sounds like my own experience wether I was born in central europe, and to begin with I did travel a lot. I have sometimes been chased in the woods,
