In 2082, humanity lives in the fruit of its great efforts and its strong faith in itself, and the utopia it has built. We will see the events that brought to this blessed point in the future and that will make it a paradise. Antoine Harris, an engineer at Interdimensional Tech, will play the role of the protagonist and will have to face the existential issues that we all have had to face at one point or another in our lives. Short summary: What is the definition of science? How a good scientist conducts the research? Does science change the culture? What is the point of life? What is death? Who am I? What will our universe will be like after the human species? The changes that the human species underwent, compared to our ancient ancestors and ancient history. The early Middle Ages, when the so-called "Dark Ages" started. The Renaissance, up to the industrial Revolution. The discoveries of ancient Rome. The French Revolution. The time of the modern era. The beginning of the digital era. Some notations. Facts on humans: The human species is the only living species on earth that is able to conceptualize. We are the only species to be aware of our unique position within the universe, we are the only living species that can understand what life is all about, and we are the only living species that can talk about and question things. It is undeniable the extent of our curiosity about the universe, about ourselves, the world, and the other living species around us. Did humans take a wrong step? If the "Adam and Eve" story is just a legend that has been passed from one generation to the other, how can we explain that our early ancestors were so afraid of death that they didn't reproduce in their natural state? What makes us human? We all started out as one single cell. Were we not created by a being from a different universe? The living beings we see around us are made up of many different cells, some of them are very different from each other, and were they not created by a being from a different universe? What about the animals? Are they just inanimate matter? Are animals just here for the purpose of serving us and performing specific tasks? Or are they sentient beings that have their own reasons and their own fears and desires? Do some animals have rights? Why do we tend to

FrostRunner is a new kind of platforming game that challenges your reflexes and movement accuracy. With fast-paced and addictive gameplay, the goal of the game is to knock down falling blocks as fast as possible with your cursor by using the platforming mechanics that you mastered. The game is set in a desolate, frozen environment seemingly abandoned by all life. Scattered throughout the icy landscape are mysterious energy crystals emitting a strange power. The player navigates 36 levels of arctic terrain using their platforming skills and a tool that allows them to tether between crystals. The constantly ticking timer encourages players to complete levels as quickly as possible. The game features a "Turbo Speed" mode that allows the player to accelerate the game play to the maximum speed that could possibly be achieved and perform the fastest jumps on the level. Two player support is also available and includes the ability to race against each other in "Head-To-Head Races" and "Team Races".Reid's air strikes bring sweltering heat back to the capital WASHINGTON — The air-conditioning went out. The cake went down the drain. The army of servants ran for cover. "The city was without power for days," said Jonathan Mark, owner of Washington's Hamilton chocolate shop. "It was just unbelievable." The spectacular blizzard of blizzard-like weather that swept across the capital on Friday turned the nation's oldest city into the butt of jokes about gridlock, rail delays and a shortage of the air-conditioners that keep Washington in the comfortable range. The flotilla of 20-foot snowdrifts that traveled the city's arteries and alleys trapped more than 2 million residents in their homes. Tens of thousands of flights were canceled, schools were closed and city dwellers played indoor versions of the snow ball, snowdog and snowplow. But the greatest hit of the winter storm in Washington came not as the holiday carolers perched on snow-laden fences or as a baseball-sized snowball was launched at a Congressional office building. It was a minor but momentous feat of engineering. The Smithsonian Institution and the Art Museum were open to the public, but people were advised to wear warm clothes and bring snow shovels. A day after blustery, icy and sleet-filled conditions prompted some high school and college teams and some baseball, basketball and ice hockey leagues to postpone their games, the District was finally poised to c9d1549cdd

 Issues with the Logitech Z905 Inspiration is a funny thing sometimes.You have to take a moment to reflect on the past (by writing something in the past tense), and then adopt some sort of critical standpoint to make a game sound good. Now, we're not just talking about awesome stuff like the Thief soundtracks, for example (with which this thread is hopefully not too familiar as it's always on my mind..what with the current drought of great soundtracks lately). The point is, there are different kinds of critics and at least one, Wren M. Grace, decided to sit back and browse the radio stations on his Logitech Z905 Game System for a couple of hours to see what he finds. Unsurprisingly, the channels between rock and dance really kicked in--until Mr. Grace found a game with mediocre music. His issue is that, being a Logitech hub, the game's music sounds like it's being delivered over FM, and not something that's CD quality. In fact, the only "high-fidelity" hardware on that system, besides the DVD drive, is the X-Fi Titanium Soundcard. I was mortified to know how he'd managed to find a game with such terribly done music, and I hope that you'll take this issue as serious as its own. And no, I'm not expecting absolute expert-level answers, given that this wasn't a formal science experiment (though I am curious as to his findings, nonetheless, based on those of Simon and Lucas, to be provided in their replies). I'm going to assume that you probably enjoy your music in the background while you play your games without second thoughts. And if you're a musician (or student of music), you probably know how difficult it is to play games with all the scratchy sounds. It's a good thing then that CD quality music works on games, right? Right, and considering that your radio station supposedly plays only in CD quality, you'd think the quality wouldn't come across as being anything but great (it's a given that every audio card not even comes close to X-Fi; from what I gather, audio cards in general aren't that good anyway...finding out what specifically CD quality is would just prove my point though). Well, I've got a solution for you: a Game Music Collector's Edition. Oh, they're just $6.99 on Sony's PlayStation Store, and it plays great CD quality music from a number of game systems including

The Chinese Room Presents: Little Orpheus! Description: "Hello! Hello! I want to be a musician, I want to hear music." - Little Orpheus You are Little Orpheus, a man in a room. You are not alone in the room. You are in a room, and the walls are moving. In the walls there is a tunnel, to another room. In that other room there are a bunch of people. And they are playing music. And you can hear the music. The people playing the music are playing your music. You play your music, and they play your music. The tunnel is closed now, but it is open again and again. The room will be opened, the music will be played, and you will be able to hear them. Also, the walls are moving. Sometimes, the walls will be slooooowww, sometimes they will be loudtttt. Sometimes you will not see them, sometimes you will see them. They won't just be on the right wall, sometimes they will be on all four walls. Sometimes they will be on the ceiling. You will be with them, and the walls will be opening. Sometimes the walls will close, and you will be alone in the room. And that is it. The room will be opened and closed many times, the walls will be opened and closed many times. You will be standing alone in the room, will be moving about the room, and sometimes you will be standing on a wall, looking down into the tunnel, with your violin in your hands, and the walls will be closing. Then they will open again. You will repeat these actions, over and over. You will hear the music of the people in the other room, and play your music. You will be wearing a purple shirt, and purple pants. Also, sometimes the room will have clocks, and they will say three minutes, and sometimes they will say ten minutes, or 15 minutes. You will go through the room and through the tunnel, and go through the room, and through the tunnel, all the time, except when the walls are closed, and you will hear the music, and your music, for as long as you want to listen. You will hear the music, and you will play your music. For as long as you
