Q: why does the $http service sometimes return an empty string? When I use the $http service of AngularJS sometimes it returns [object Object] as the content and sometimes returns "" Why does this happen? A: Due to javascripts strict typing, the return of `$http.get` is a promise. What means a promise is resolved or rejected with is a string. If you have the code below: `$http.get().then(function (response) { console.log(response) });` response will be an object with a status and a body property, if the promise is rejected the body will be `{}`.
