The aim of this study was to determine whether there is a physical factor (laser radiation) that would act on the compression of chlorhexidine in the presence of a sound wave. We used ultrasonic waves of 450 KHz and 500 kHz to evaluate the effect of sound waves on the liquid chlorhexidine being pressurized by a laser beam. The experiments were performed with an amplitude of sound that ranged from 5% to 65% of the laser ray. The pressure-time curves obtained using the photoacoustic pressure gauge were analyzed in order to determine the acoustic velocity of the liquid itself in the presence of the laser radiation. The pressure-time curves were fitted to an exponential function, yielding the acoustic velocity as a function of the amplitude of the sound wave. Chlorhexidine's acoustic velocity is increased by 14% for an amplitude of sound of 5% of the laser wavelength. The main mechanism of acoustic compression of chlorhexidine in the presence of laser radiation is by simultaneous heating of the liquid, followed by the subsequent increase in its pressure.The standard approach for the development of novel drugs aimed at combating obesity and type 2 diabetes mellitus (T2DM) has been the
