As I'm sure many of you know, Gavin has a very interesting past. As far as I know, he worked in the Clinton White House, then left to found his own consulting firm and campaign for local office in the Bay Area. Since 2006 Gavin has run and won for Mayor of San Francisco twice. He was California Attorney General before taking the job as mayor of the city he currently serves. A candidate for office as long as he's running for Mayor, no one asked him whether he left the Clinton White House via Huma Abedin to get there. The Economist is out with a three-part series today on the matter. It's worth checking out. Gavin's not well liked by many inside of San Francisco for a number of reasons, not the least of which is some underhanded political scheming he was caught up in in the last mayoral race. More on that below. But he's a very solid fighter. He's strong, courageous, effective, and knows how to fight dirty. He's also blunt and blunt about his intentions. So when he says he's got some menaces to make you men bleed, he means it. For a really good look at the way he's doing his bidding, I'd recommend taking a look at the series you'll find here. It's in three pieces. The New Republic's Ron Fournier had a lengthy interview 6d1f23a050
