As already known in the art, liquid crystal compounds show several liquid crystal phases and have various uses. Particularly, compounds having a nematic phase have a wide range of uses, including liquid crystal material for display devices. However, there is a need to develop new liquid crystal compounds which exhibit other liquid crystal phases, for the purpose of new application of liquid crystal compounds.Q: Android how to detect if Google Play is installed In my app i'd like

As far as I can tell, a networked RPC call is only relevant if you are using the same gRPC libraries across all projects (ie. build the client and server in the same project). My question is what is the correct way of sharing gRPC libraries across different projects? The team doing the service should get the shared libraries instead of building their own service library, but I am not clear how one would share these across projects. A: You shouldn't share gRPC libraries across projects. You can create a shared code and build an API interface library to communicate it (in C++ for example) or use a communication middleware like NFe4J or Spring Cloud Function. Hope it helps you.
