Zet 9 Geo Crack

the relative risk of cocaine versus crack increases with the number of lines of use, as the amount of powder ingested for each dose of crack is equivalent to the powder ingested by smoking 2-3 lines of crack. this does not mean that crack use is "risk free" as crack use is associated with a high risk of overdose, especially for users who are not able to administer naloxone (i.e., overdose) or have suffered from a severe cocaine-induced overdose in the past. crack use is also associated with higher drug-related health consequences (e.g., hiv and other stds). crack users are also more likely to use other illegal substances (e., heroin) and to use legal substances (e., marijuana) more frequently. crack use is also associated with greater likelihood of being arrested. cocaine is also associated with higher mortality, though the relative risk of mortality from crack is lower than for cocaine, the absolute risk is higher. this is because crack users are more likely to have untreated medical conditions (e.g., hiv) and experience other drug-related complications (e., hepatitis c and other stds). this increased risk is further exacerbated because crack is so inexpensive. a key caveat to this research is that the results may not be generalizable to all us states; however, it does provide a broad overview of the health status of individuals who are currently incarcerated and on parole or probation for crack-related offenses. the national institute on drug abuse (nida) has documented a wealth of information about the health consequences of crack use, including a description of the potency of crack cocaine and the dosage/amounts of crack users commonly use. 5ec8ef588b
