How is this version better than version 4? That might vary from type and use case to use case. Actually, perhaps the old saying if it ain't broke, don't fix it might be more appropriate in some situations than it was in the past. I think it always prevents the developer from wanting to reinvent the wheel. I know, I know, a lot of people had paid for many years for an upgraded version. But you are not guaranteed to get a better or faster experience when upgrading, just as you are not guaranteed to get a worse experience (if that is the only way you work) when using a new version. The idea really is to do things that can be done better, like improving image structure while editing. For that, remember that all those solid and semiclear adjustments are easy to do in LR5. So in fact it's not really a revolution at the RDP, it's just improved to make it easier to use. You still have lots of flexibility to implement your own workflow or to organize the files into folders or collections as you wish to without having to sacrifice backward compatibility. Adobe Photoshop is probably the only major application that has been updated for consistent backward and forward compatibility. That should not be mistaken for 'next to no change'. There has been a major update to the PSD format, the Hierarchical File System, which we believe does make it easier for people to exchange PSDs, using the change log feature. It's also been updated to better support Windows 10. Still, it's been updated for better performance and to address workflow issues in order to make it a better tool for photographers. But don't get too hung up on the fact that it seems a bit phoenix-like to have a better workflow experience. It's also a bit ironical that to compensate for the limited changes, the update is bigger than the last version. At least in my opinion, the updates do not make it look like an improvement. Some of the updates seem odd to me.
